Introduction

NEW BLOOMFIELD, PA., February 15, 1915.

Dear Friends: If asked to whom I address myself so affectionately, I could think of nothing more fitting than to reply,—To those who are my associates through no fault of their own.

Some time ago I became interested in compiling and classifying my genealogy. I realized, of course, that all good genealogists are equipped with a high power telescope so that when anything of magnitude appears they can enlarge it and bring it near, and further that discretion must be exercised in the use of such instruments in this business because there are objects above the horizon of every one that, if observed at all, should be looked at only through the reversed instrument.

It is customary, I believe, and very agreeable, when possible, to start with some notable person,—the more notable, the better. History furnishes quite an array of persons, of different nationalities and divers colors, whose names are the same as mine, or differ so slightly that a good etymologist could easily reconcile the difference, but I am unable to find that anyone has ever discovered, forged or invented connecting links, with a character of first class magnitude, that I could tie to. To some that may look like downright stupidity, but I am not considering possibilities of that kind,—not in this connection. I know just why those links are not to be found. It is the result of our inborn truthfulness,—hopeless, helpless truthfulness in time of need. I knew I would find evidence of that upon every hand as I proceeded with this undertaking.

After prolonged and patient search I became convinced of the impossibility of finding a suitable hero from whom to descend and I consoled myself with the reflection that, after all, I would no doubt show off to better advantage in more ordinary company.

If Abraham Lincoln was correct in believing that the Lord loved the common people because He made so many of them, then, for that reason as well as for many others, I think He must have a great affection for us, for I find very few that are uncommon in any respect. It has also been said that "the good die first," and, as an evidence of our superiority, if evidence is needed, I assure you that we are entitled to make the mournful boast that a very large percentage of our connection have been good enough to die young, while, so far as I can discover, none have ever been sent to jail and very few to the legislature. It is a universally recognized law that only the good can see good and only the great can recognize greatness, and after all this may be my most serious handicap.

A large part of the information concerning the early history of our connection has been gleaned from two books kindly loaned me by W. B. Anderson. One is a little paper book entitled, "A Brief Sketch of the Ancestors and Relatives of J. P. Anderson's Children," written about 1868, by Chas. H. Anderson, of Huntingdon, and presented by the author to Alex. B. Anderson. The other is a small volume entitled, "Fragments of Family and Contemporaneous History," written in 1867, by Rev. Thomas H. Robinson, a great-grandson of George Robinson, who lived, (until about 1797, when he moved to Kentucky,) in Sherman's Valley, Pa., upon the property upon which Fort Robinson was erected. It is a book that contains the fruits of considerable research and displays literary ability worthy of its distinguished author. Rev. Robinson was at that time pastor of the Market Square Presbyterian church, Harrisburg, Pa., and later became a member of the faculty of the Western Theological Seminary, Allegheny, Pa.

In addition to the above books, I had the good fortune some years ago to inherit an old desk that had been used, for a hundred years, as a depository for family letters, and in it I found about sixty letters and some other papers bearing dates from 1791 to 1856, which are interesting and instructive to a student of family history. Accession to these books and letters seemed to me to constitute an opportunity to obtain information and record it in form suitable for easy communication that ought not to be neglected. This material has been supplemented, in the five years just passed, by numerous letters, kindly written in response to inquiries addressed to the writers, giving records of scores of families whose existence was unknown to me. Altogether, I have what seems to me pretty complete data for a genealogical tree, beginning with my great-grandparents and extending, in some families, to the seventh generation. My desire has been to get a record of every individual belonging to the connection and, although the result is not all that could be desired, I feel very grateful to the many persons who have so kindly co-operated to make possible the degree of success attained, and with kind wishes to all, I am,

Very truly yours,

A. R. JOHNSTON.

Sherman's Valley

The history of Sherman's Valley and adjacent parts, as they passed from barbarism to civilization, was materially influenced by the following important events:

First, the Indian purchase of July 6, 1754.

Second, Braddock's defeat, July 9, 1755.

Third, Armstrong's expedition against Kittanning, September, 1756.

Fourth, Battle of Quebec, Sept. 13, 1759, and Surrender of Montreal, Sept. 8, 1760.

Fifth, Pontiac's War, 1763.

Sixth, Bouquet's expedition to the Muskingum, September, 1764.

Little need be said about these events as they are discussed in detail in all histories of colonial times. The territory under consideration was not the home domain of any Indian tribe, but as stated in the History of the Susquehanna and Juniata Valleys, "the country was not, on that account, any less highly prized by them; in fact, the reverse was the case, and they regarded it as the most valuable of all their possessions, because it included vast tracts of their best and most productive hunting grounds. Referring to this fact, Conrad Weiser, in a letter to Richard Peters, the proprietary secretary, dated April 22, 1749, said: 'The Indians say (and with truth) that country is their only hunting ground for deer, because further to the north there is nothing but spruce woods, and the ground covered with laurel bushes, not a single deer could be found or killed there.'" At the same time the abundance of game and fish, the good timber and the fertile and well watered valleys were attractive to the white man. These conditions were the cause of endless friction between the races, and in order to end the difficulties constantly arising between the proprietaries and the Indians, on account of squatters invading these hunting grounds, the purchase of territory now composing several counties, was made for four hundred pounds, lawful money of New York.

The purchase was made at Albany, New York, from the Six Nations, who had promised the Delawares to reserve these hunting grounds for them. The deal greatly incensed the Delawares and when Braddock was defeated by the French they became the allies of the French and soon began a general massacre of the settlers.

Col. John Armstrong, a native of Cumberland County, conducted an expedition which resulted in the complete destruction of Kittanning, the base, sustained by the French, from which the Indians operated.

The fall of Quebec and Montreal destroyed the power of the French to incite and assist the Indians.

Pontiac, an Indian of remarkable intelligence and executive ability, believed that the advance of the English meant the extermination of his race, and, acting upon that belief, he organized a warfare that raged fiercely from Detroit to the Susquehanna.

Bouquet's expedition, like Armstrong's, was carried into the heart of the Indian's country, and, as a climax to the other events mentioned, guaranteed forever the safety of these parts against general invasion by the Indians.

Sherman's Valley, the place of my nativity, was part of the Indian purchase of July 6, 1754, and was embraced in Cumberland County until the erection of Perry County by act of legislature approved March 22, 1820. Several influences operated to make it originally a Scotch and Scotch-Irish settlement.

First was the fact that the Covenanters were dissatisfied with the policy of the English government toward their religion in England, Scotland, and Ireland. For several decades many had been immigrating voluntarily and after the collapse of the cause of the young pretender at the battle of Colloden in 1746, many were impelled to leave because their hope of modifying the policy of the English government was at an end and others found it unsafe to remain in their native land because they had been identified with the fallen cause. Thus the religious contention that had operated for a long time to send Scotch and Scotch-Irish Presbyterians to America had come to a crisis about eight years before the opening of this part of the state to white settlers.

At the same time there were influences at work in the Province of Pennsylvania which directed such of these immigrants as came to Pennsylvania to locate in this part of the province. It would seem that the relations between the Presbyterians and the Quakers were not any more amicable than they had been between the Presbyterians and the Episcopalians, for we find that in 1724, James Logan a native of Ireland, and secretary to the proprietaries, writes to the proprietaries saying that the Scotch-Irish have generally taken up the southern lands, (meaning toward the Maryland line, in Lancaster County,) and as they rarely approached him to propose to purchase he calls them bold and indigent strangers, saying, as their excuse when challenged for titles, that we had solicited for colonists and they had come accordingly. They were, however, understood to be a tolerated class, exempt from rents by an ordinance of 1720, in consideration of their being a frontier people, forming a kind of cordon of defence, if needful. They were soon called bad neighbors by the Indians, treating them disdainfully, and finally were the same race who committed the outrages called the Paxtang Massacre. Again in 1730, Logan writes to the proprietaries and complains of the Scotch-Irish in an audacious and disorderly manner possessing themselves of the whole of the Conestoga Manor. In doing this by force they alleged that it was against the laws of God and nature that so much land should be idle while so many Christians wanted it to labor on. The Paxtang boys, he said, were great sticklers for religion and Scripture quotation against the heathen.

The report of Richard Peters, Logans successor, made in 1743, of his experience with the Scotch-Irish of Marsh Creek, now Adams County, gives them an equally bad reputation.

Soon after the erection of Cumberland County, in 1750, the proprietaries in consequence of the frequent disturbances between the governor and these settlers, gave orders to their agents to sell no land in York or Lancaster Counties to the Irish; and also to make advantageous offers of removal to them in Paxton, Swatara, and Donegal Townships, to induce them to remove to Cumberland County. These offers, being liberal, were accepted by many.

From the foregoing we learn of the influences which directed the stream of emmigration to what was then Cumberland County and also of the state of feeling existing between our forefathers and the Quakers.

This lack of unanimity had its disastrous effect during the following years when the frontier was having its trouble with the Indians. November 28, 1755, Governor Morris writes to Sir Thomas Robinson: "There is so great a majority of Quakers in the house that no war-like preparations are to be expected from them, it being, as they pretend, contrary to their principles." Upon the other hand Elisha Salter, commissary general, wrote April 5, 1756, to Governor Morris, from Carlisle: "Upon my arrival I found the people in the greatest confusion, the troops abandoning the forts and the country people gathering together in the greatest consternation. The people of this county is enraged at the assembly almost to distraction and I fear they will carry their resentment to a great length with them. All their cry is money and ammunition." The results of this state of feeling was that the people of Pennsylvania did not co-operate against the Indians as they should have done, the settlers in Cumberland County felt that they were not sustained in their hour of need by those who were safe behind the "cordon of defence," many of them deserted from the service when in 1764 it was proposed to march them away from their homes under Colonel Bouquet because, not having been supported in their own difficulties, they did not think it safe to leave their families and did not feel under any obligation to people of other sections, and many of them migrated to Virginia where the Indian attacks were met upon different "principles," or to Kentucky, which at that time was part of Virginia. When we recall the beautiful account presented by our school histories of the peace policy of the Quakers toward the Indians it reminds us that some one has said "history is a conspiracy against the truth."

Whether the peace doctrine of the Quakers was believed in by anybody else I do not know, but it would seem from the following extract from Robert Robinson's narrative that some of the Quakers believed in it: "The next I remember of, was the Woolcomber family, on Sherman's Creek; the whole of the inhabitants of the valley were gathered to a fort at George Robinson's; but Woolcomber would not leave home; he said it was the Irish who were killing one another; these peaceable people, the Indians, would not hurt any person. Being at home and at dinner the Indians came in, and the Quaker asked them to come and eat dinner; an Indian answered that he did not come to eat, but for scalps; the son, a boy of fifteen, when he heard the Indian say so, repaired to the back door and as he went out he looked back and saw the Indian strike the tomahawk into his father's head. The boy ran over the creek which was near to the house, and heard the screams of his mother, sisters and brothers," etc. (This extract seems to refute the oft repeated statement that Quakers were immune from Indian barbarities.)

In 1755 and 1756 the number of men able to bear arms east of the Susquehanna was reduced from about three thousand to less than one hundred. This was during the Indian massacres following upon Braddock's defeat, which occurred July 9, 1755. Among the names of the taxables of Cumberland County at that period, we find Andersons, Armstrongs, Campbells, Douglasses, Johnstons, McCords, and others that occur in the following pages. What relation existed between them and their successors of the same names it is impossible to establish, but among the Scotch people of that time I believe it was the custom to regard every person bearing the same name as belonging to the same clan unless there was a satisfactory reason for thinking otherwise. Some of those whose names disappear from the lists of taxables are known to have been killed. Living in these parts was a precarious business until after the subsidence of the atrocities associated with Pontiac's War in 1763. In that year every white person north of the Kittoctinny or Blue Mountain and west of the Susquehanna was killed or compelled to flee for their lives. After that there were no more Indian atrocities in these parts.

The Quakers thought that kind words were the ammunition to overcome Indians with and no doubt they were sufficient for a trader's purposes or for the purposes of any one whose business was mutually advantageous or a matter of indifference to the Indians, but these valleys were the Indians' hunting grounds and for any settler to locate in them meant ruin to their interests. The situation did not offer or admit mutual advantages. It was a cold, hard proposition that could only be settled by the extermination of one party or the other. These frontiersmen must meet the conditions as they were, not as they might wish to have them, and the emigrants from the country whose representative people could plan and perpetrate such deliberate barbarities as the Glencoe massacre and other incidents of similar character, though of less importance, were not strangers to the cruelty and treachery which formed such prominent traits of the Indian character. In fact the inaccessibility of parts of Scotland and the weakness of its central government had operated for centuries to develop a race that recognized the word of their chieftain as the supreme law and, as a consequence, petty wars and raids, among themselves and into the northern counties of England, as unrelenting and barbarous as Indian wars, had been the incidents of Scottish history during these centuries, and these eminently pious Scotch and Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, it is evident, were not engaged in a business that was entirely new,—when they tackled Mr. Indian.

As already mentioned, many of these people were induced to come here from Lancaster County when that ceased to be the frontier, and one might suppose that now, after the expulsion of the Indians, they would be contented and happy. It may not be true that a Scotchman is never at peace unless he is at war, but it does seem that uninterrupted peace did not agree with them. Perhaps they longed for the good old times when they swapped greetings, through the medium of the flintlock, with uninvited visitors. Perhaps such diversion had an exhilarating effect upon the toil-worn cotter. Perhaps they were impelled, consciously or unconsciously, from within or from above, to make unrelenting war upon the Amalekites. Be that as it may, the fact remains that many of these people who had been adjudged a frontier people, attested the judgment by following the frontier as it advanced, to the west and south. The self-sacrificing devotion and patient endurance displayed by the Scottish people in their contest, often against appalling odds, for the faith upon which they rested their future hope, qualified them as a people, and the hand that thus qualified them for the work guided them in the doing of it.

Johnstons

The name, Johnston, appears often in the early lists of taxables of Lancaster County, which then included the present Dauphin County, and in the early lists of Cumberland County, which covered what is now Perry, Juniata, and Franklin Counties.

It is interesting to note that John Johnston was the first constable of Lack Township, which at that time covered the entire Tuscarora Valley. He was appointed by the Court of Cumberland County, Oct. 23, 1754. He was known as "The White Hunter," and he was, evidently, well acquainted with the Indian disposition, for he sold his property soon after Braddock's defeat and got out of the community before the massacres that almost, for the time, cleared Cumberland of the whites. According to A. L. Guss, writing for the "History of the Susquehanna and Juniata Valleys," Andrew Johnston was the first lawyer in Juniata County. He edifies the readers of that work with a sample, dated Feb. 7, 1755, of Andrew's handiwork as a lawyer.

The above mentioned lists of taxables exhibit the name in a great variety of spellings,—sometimes with a "t," sometimes without, sometimes the "h" is omitted and rarely there is a final "e." This, probably, displays the orthographical ingenuity of the assessor rather than the preference of the person assessed. Probably a similar statement can be made with regard to the spelling of the name as found in history: for instance, Johnston, of Warriston, is the father of Johnstone, King William's Scottish secretary.

It is often suggested that the name means son of John. This, together with the fact that the earlier generations showed such a partiality for John as a surname, might lead one to suppose that we were descended from some noted John. I was, therefore, interested, when reading Waverly, to find in Chapter XIX, an allusion to "John the Great." But he was a highlander, and the highlanders were usually friendly to the Catholic branch of the House of Stuart. I do not, therefore, think that we are descended from that John or in fact from any highland family, for although I could not conscientiously say that our Scottish ancestry were all good Christians, I do believe that they were pretty generally good Presbyterians. The families that came to this country seemed to be the subjects of two well confirmed habits, the Presbyterian habit and the John habit. They did not seem to consider themselves properly launched upon the sea of life until they were united with some branch of the Presbyterian Church and had a son John.

I have long observed, in talking with persons by the name of Johnston, that the presence of the "t" is regarded as an evidence of Scotch descent.

Recently I received a letter from Miss Blanche Ford, one of the sixth generation in this genealogy, from which I make the following abstract:

During one of the wars which Great Britain had with another country a General Johnston took an active part in one of the battles won by the English. It was a turning point in the war, and such a great victory that the king or queen gave him seventy-seven acres of land in Ireland for his bravery and told him that he and all his descendants should spell their name with a "t" in it. This land was to be handed down to the oldest son in every family and would have been inherited by my grandfather if the family had remained in Ireland.

This legend is no doubt as slight a modification of the occurrence as one could expect after more than two hundred years of verbal reiteration. After the success of the protestant cause in 1688, William and Mary drove out the Irish Catholics from the north of Ireland and gave their lands, in part, to Scotch Protestants. Macaulay, speaking of Ireland in the seventeenth century, says, "The appellation of Irish was then given exclusively to the Celts and to those families which, though not of Celtic origin, had in the course of ages degenerated into Celtic manners. These people had with few exceptions adhered to the Church of Rome." The Scotch which William and Mary transplanted were there to redeem Ireland from the Irish. They were expected to be, and wished to be, Scotch in all things except their place of residence. The name Scotch-Irish was coined to proclaim that they were not Irish. The "t," I have no doubt, was regarded, by sovereign and subject, as a token of the covenant rather than an essential part of it, and a Johnston would guard the "t" in his name as jealously as he would guard the eyes in his head if he thought the loss of it might subject him to the charge of being Irish.

Our family is not descended from any of those whose names have been referred to as appearing in the early lists of taxables of Lancaster and Cumberland Counties, although letters in my possession indicate that a warm friendship existed between some of them and our forebears.

Through the kindness of the editor of the People's Advocate and Press, Mr. H. E. Sheibley, of this place, I was allowed to examine an abstract of a letter written by a nephew of my great-grandfather, and below I present a copy of such parts as were interesting to me.

Abstract from a letter written Oct. 10, 1857, by Col. John Johnston, of Dayton, Ohio, and published by the People's Advocate of Feb. 24, 1858.

Col. John Johnstone, now of Dayton, Ohio, but formerly of Sherman's Valley, Perry County, has published an exceedingly interesting letter in the Cincinnati Gazette, detailing his early experiences as one of the early settlers of Perry County, and as one of the pioneers of the West. Whilst many of the settlers of the Johnstone family remain with us, and are regarded as men of the first integrity and usefulness, some have made themselves prominent in the West in civil and military affairs. Colonel Johnstone, the author of the article below, has been called by his fellow citizens to fill many responsible stations, in all of which he has acquitted himself nobly. Doubtless he has memorials of many incidents connected with the early settlements of Sherman's Valley and its pioneers, which his friends here would be glad to have him communicate to the Advocate. (Editor of Advocate.)

DAYTON, OHIO, October 10, 1857.

To William Perry, Esq.,

President Pioneer Association, Cincinnati.

Dear Sir: In obedience to the promise made to the association a few months since, I furnish this communication, detailing my early experience as one of the few surviving pioneers spared to the present day.

My father, Stephen Johnson, with his brothers John and Francis, each having large families, emigrated from the north of Ireland at the close of the American Revolution, and settled in Sherman's Valley, in the then county of Cumberland (now Perry County), Pennsylvania. My paternal ancestors came from Scotland into Ireland with the Protestant King William, and being officers, were rewarded with estates near Enniskillen, in the county of Fermanagh. My maternal ancestors, named Barnard, were of the Huguenots, who fled from France for conscience sake and took refuge in Ireland. I can, therefore, with some truth, boast of having descended from a good stock. Several of my blood relations, both by father, and mother, fought, bled and died under Washington, in the glorious contest for independence, and, as I humbly trust, as their blood flows in my veins, the spirit which guided them, has still an abiding place in my affections, for my rule, throughout a long life of more than four score years, in peace or war, has invariably been to go for our country, no matter who might govern it, and this lesson has been evermore instilled into the minds of my children; and so it was with their excellent mother, who trained them up for God and their country.

* * * * *

My early years were spent at Carlisle, Pennsylvania, in the mercantile establishment of Judge John Creig. The place being the rendezvous of troops enlisted for the war with the western Indians. Gen. St. Clare had been defeated, and another army had to be recruited and equipped for the field, under the gallant and chivalrous Wayne, in order to chastise the savages and gain the ground that was lost in the campaigns of Harmar and St. Clare. At times there were large bodies of troops in the barracks at Carlisle. These were marched on to the West as soon as they were properly drilled and fit for service. Col. Thomas Butler, who was wounded in St. Clare's defeat, with other officers who survived that sanguinary contest, were there stationed and it was hearing their descriptions of the boundless prairies, forests and rivers of the great West, that first inspired my mind with an ardent desire to visit the country. John Craigh was preparing to go West with a stock of goods for the troops. I agreed at once to accompany him, traveling the whole distance to Pittsburgh on foot, in company with wagons loaded with supplies and private property.

I was then in my seventeenth year, and the journey, performed in the depth of winter, fifteen miles a day, for loaded wagons, was considered a good day's work. The average for the whole trip per day would fall short of that, such was the wretched condition of the roads at that time, 1792. There was not at that time a single mile of turnpike in the State of Pennsylvania. The mountain region was so thinly populated, that the local labor was entirely inadequate to keep the roads in any kind of repair. The settlers west of the mountains transported their supplies of salt, iron and other necessities, on pack horses. I have seen fifty horses thus loaded in one party at a time, passing over these rugged steeps. No salt or iron was then made in the West. The present generation could scarcely conceive the difficulties under which the early settlers of these days labored. While working the fields some had to watch against the approach and surprise of the Indians. In after years I had prisoners among my Indians, taken from near Redstone Old Fort, now Bronxville, and many from the adjacent parts of Virginia. Some taken in infancy, and too young to enable us ever after to trace up their paternity, or find the place of their capture. Many such distressing cases fell under my observation during my long agency for the Indian Affairs in the Northwest.

* * * * *

I spent the winter of 1795 at Bourbon Court House, having an uncle at that time a resident of that county. William Garrard, son of Governor Garrard, an early friend and acquaintance who had received his education at Dickinson College, Carlisle, Pennsylvania, resided a few miles from the court house. This made my sojourn there agreeable. I there made the acquaintance of the celebrated Daniel Boone, who was brought to the place by a Mr. Owings, as well as I can recollect, for the purpose of tracing up some land lines and titles. I slept four or five nights in the same room with Boone. He was a modest retiring person of few words; scarcely speaking unless spoken to, of medium size. His age at that time might have been fifty years; although in midwinter, he was poorly attired; his garments all, or nearly all, linen. In the early period of his life he was a prisoner among my Shawnese Indians, and as such often trod the ground of Upper Piqua, for many years my home, and the seat of my agency for Indian Affairs in the Northwest.

* * * * *

Among the felicities of my long life is that of having often beheld the person of George Washington. I heard him deliver his last speech to both houses of congress, in December, 1796; it being his practice always to address the national legislature in person. His successor in the Presidency, John Adams, pursued the same course. On the advent of Mr. Jefferson the custom ceased, and ever since, messages in writing have taken the place of speeches. Washington died in December, 1799, and in the winter of that year, and in 1800, the President and congress ordered funeral honors to be celebrated to his memory. It fell to my lot, as secretary of the Washington Masonic Lodge, No. 59, to take part in the ceremonies. Col. Richard Henry Lee, of the Revolution, then a member of congress from Virginia, was the appointed orator on the occasion.

* * * * *

The uncle referred to in the above letter was John Johnston, the person designated in the following genealogy as the head of "Family No. 1." About that time, as shown by a letter copied under "Family No. 1" he lived in Bourbon Co., Ky. The Governor Garrard was James Garrard, who was governor of Kentucky from 1796 to 1804.

From this letter we learn that our forebears were covenanters and members of the party in Scotland that labored to bring about the revolution which resulted in establishing the protestant sovereignty of William and Mary over the British Isles. In reference to the preliminary arrangements for the revolution I quote Macaulay's History of England, as follows: "Agents of various ranks passed and repassed between the Thames and the Hague. Among these a Scotchman, of some parts and great activity, named Johnstone, was the most useful. He was cousin to Burnet, and son of a prominent covenanter who had, soon after the restoration, been put to death for treason, and who was honored by his party as a martyr." The eminent covenanter referred to above was Archibald Johnston, sometimes referred to as Johnston of Warriston. He was an advocate, or, as we would say, an attorney. Rev. Alexander Henderson and he were the committee that framed the "National Covenant" and he was one of the five who presented it to the people for their signatures at the Grey Friar's church in Edinburg, Feb. 28, 1638. He was clerk of the general assembly which met at Glasgow, Nov. 21, 1638, and resolved to continue its sittings after it had been dissolved by the king's high commissioner. He was one of those who in the general assembly of 1643, favored sending a Scottish army to assist the leaders in the Long parliament in their contest with Charles I. For these and similar acts orders for his arrest for treason, were issued in 1661. He escaped to the continent, was taken in France and executed in Edinburgh.

Thus we see that the foremost of the name were covenanters and, except for a short time following the "Glorious Revolution of 1688," the covenanters were generally at variance with the policy of the government. This fact, no doubt, accounts for so many of the name coming to this country during the century following this time. At the time of the revolution they were probably all, or nearly all, whigs, or supporters of the protestant party, but the Scottish politicians of the time were exceedingly fickle, even for politicians. They seem to have been made of different timber from that used in the making of the Scotchmen who had but recently sacrificed their lives in defence of their religious convictions. I have read that Sir Walter Scott said that his family records were free from all stains except border theft and high treason, which he hoped were gentlemanly crimes. Men prominent in politics were not expected to be over-scrupulous and most of them kept well within the popular expectation. Macaulay tells us that when the king's friends were offended by his appointment of the odious Sunderland one of the lord's justices: "William did not understand these feelings. Sunderland was able; he was useful; he was unprincipled indeed; but so were all the English politicians of the generation which had learned, under the sullen tyranny of the saints, to disbelieve in virtue, and which had, during the wild jubilee of the restoration, been utterly dissolved in vice. He was a fair specimen of his class, a little worse, perhaps, than Leeds or Godolphin, and about as bad as Russell or Marlborough. Why he was to be hunted from the herd the king could not imagine."

It was a common thing at that time for men, who did not receive the recognition they desired from the king, to join the Jacobites who were continually plotting to bring about the return of James to the throne. Others, seeing a king upon the throne and a claimant to the throne just across the channel, felt that their only safety lay in pretending loyalty to both. Out of such discontented elements a club was formed whose business seems, in part, to have been to pretend friendship for both William and James without engaging actively in the support of either, and it is a matter of history that some of the Johnstons committed the "gentlemanly crime" of joining that club. While it is true that the most prominent individuals of the Johnston clan, as well as the majority of them, were supporters of the protestant cause there were some exceptions. At the battle of Killiecrankie, July 27, 1689, it was a Johnston who supported and spoke words of comfort to Lord Graham of Claverhouse, the most cruel of all the persecutors of the covenanters, when he met his death. Another instance of opposition to the established rule, occurring at a time when opposition of that kind was quite common, was that of the Chevalier Johnstone, who was with the Young pretender in his last military effort, in 1746, to regain the throne of his ancestors. He wrote a memoir giving his impressions of the uprising of 1746, and thirteen years later he fought upon the side of the French at the battle of Quebec.

Everything I can find bearing upon the question seems to indicate that Annandale, the valley of the Annan River, in the south of Scotland, was their ancestral home. History records that Robert Johnstone, a Scottish historian who died in 1639, "bequeathed considerable sums to various towns in Annandale, the home of his ancestors."

As a caption to Chapter VIII of "The Fair Maid of Perth," I find this couplet:

Within the bounds of Annandale,
The gentle Johnstones ride;
They have been there a thousand years,
A thousand more they'll bide.

From the same chapter I copy: "My name is Devil's Dick, of Hellgarth, well known in Annandale for a gentle Johnstone. I follow the stout laird of Wamphray, who rides with his kinsman the redoubted Lord of Johnstone, who is banded with the doughty Earl of Douglass; and the earl and the lord, and the Laird and I, the esquire, fly our hawks where we find our game, and ask no man whose ground we ride over."

A footnote to this last quotation reads as follows:

"Every Scotchman must regret that the name of Johnstone should have disappeared from the peerage, and hope that ere long some one of the many claimants for the minor honors at least of the house of Annandale may make out a case to the satisfaction of the house of lords. The great estates of the family are still nearly entire, and in worthy hands:—they have passed to a younger branch of the noble house of Hopetoun, one of the claimants of the elder titles."

In Redgauntlet, Summertrees refers to a ravine, near to Moffat, as the place where the Johnstones hid their stolen cattle.

From the Monastery, Chapter XXIV, I copy the following footnote:

"It was of Lochwood, the hereditary fortress of the Johnstones of Annandale, a strong castle situated in the centre of a quaking bog, that James VI said that he who built it was a thief in his heart."

When one applies hard names to another it more often betrays a feeling of resentment than it indicates an overwhelming desire to proclaim the truth, therefore I take the above remark about the Johnstone heart affection as additional evidence that they were affiliated with the Douglasses, the sworn enemies of the Stuarts.

The above references not only indicate that Annandale was the ancestral home of the Johnstones but they give pretty definite suggestions as to their occupation. I used to look upon the picture entitled, "A Scottish Raid," as a mighty poor display of sheep and horn cattle, but since taking up the study of my genealogy I have almost come to regard it as a family portrait. It is not necessary to apologize for having descended from moss troopers, or border thieves, but an explanation may be necessary to establish one's respectability.

In those days the robbery of an unfriendly neighbor or clan, like piracy upon the sea, was considered honorable. The commonwealth sentiment was not sufficiently developed to take offense at it and the wrong of it was lost sight of in the admiration excited by the ingenuity and daring displayed in the act. Annandale was in, or near to, the Debatable Land, a name given to a portion of territory which was the frequent subject of disputes between Scotland and England. The central government was too weak to punish lawlessness or protect honest industry and its administration was calculated to encourage, rather than to discourage, raids across the border. To borrow the language of the Maid of the Mill, in the Monastery, it was "A land where men did by the strong hand and defended by the ready wit."

According to the well understood and thoroughly approved ethics of the time, the standing of the robber and the merit of his transactions depended upon the magnitude of his exploits, where they were executed, who his victims were, etc.,—the misappropriation was a secondary consideration. One caught stealing upon the wrong side of the border was likely to be hanged, even when he was mistaken about the location of the border. Many of them, to quote from The Abbot, were "men that would not have lifted under twenty cows at once, and would have held themselves dishonoured if they had taken a drift of sheep or the like, but always managed their raids in full credit and honor."

As an indication of the esteem in which they were held by the Church fathers, who were then the guardians of truth and learning, I present the following from the Monastery: "In Abbot Ingilram's days the freebooters were the best welcome men that came to Saint Mary's. Ay, they paid tithe of every drove they brought over from the South; and because they were something lightly come by, I have known them make the tithe a seventh—that is, if their confessor knew his business—Ay, when we saw from the tower a score of fat bullocks, or a drove of sheep, coming down the valley, with two or three stout men-at-arms behind them, with their glittering steel caps, and their black-jacks, and their long lances, the good Lord Abbot Ingilram was wont to say—he was a merry man—there come the tithes of the spoilers of the Egyptians! Ay, and I have seen the famous John the Armstrang,—a fair man he was and a goodly, the more pity that hemp was ever heckled for him—I have seen him come into the Abbey church with nine tassels of gold in his bonnet, and every tassel made of nine English nobles, and he would go from chapel to chapel, and from image to image, and from altar to altar, on his knees—and leave here a tassel, and there a noble, till there was as little gold on his bonnet as on my hood—you will find no such border thieves now!”

The evidence, so far as I can learn, seems to justify the conclusion that the people in the neighborhood of Annandale were of two classes, the robbers and the robbed, and the Johnstons seem to have been rather distinguished members of the better class.

Andersons

The name, Anderson, occurs frequently in the early history of Cumberland, Sherman's, and Tuscarora Valleys. March 25, 1762, the Cumberland County Court appointed William Anderson the first supervisor of Lack Township, which at the time covered Tuscarora Valley. This man, in the year following his appointment, made the first assessment of the taxables of Lack Township, and his name appears assessed for one hundred acres in what is now Spruce Hill Township. He and a son were killed July 10, 1763, during the last general massacre in these parts.

Prof. J. R. Flickinger, writing for the History of the Susquehanna and Juniata Valleys, says: William Anderson came from Scotland and took up the land now (1884) owned by A. K. Dobbs, Jonathan Seager, Philip Reisinger, and others. The first warrant found was for fifty acres and was dated Sept. 12, 1766, and on the 6th of May, 1767, "one hundred acres which included his improvements, adjoining the Limestone Ridge on the south, and the Connococheague Mountain on the north, and a place called Crosses' Cabins on the west. He lived on this land a few years, then crossed to the south side of Limestone Ridge and bought a large tract lying north and west of Andersonburg, the farm on which the heirs of Hon. A. B. Anderson reside, being the homestead.

I find in the list of taxables for 1763, which is the earliest I could find, that he was taxed for one hundred acres in "Upper Terone," at that time. This is, no doubt, the same tract referred to above as warranted in 1767. I have not been able to fix the time when he came from Scotland. His eldest child was born June 23, 1763. This child, it will be observed, was seventeen days old when the other William Anderson was killed by the Indians in Tuscarora, about six or eight miles north of the place of his first settlement in Sherman's Valley. I cannot think, however, that he lived in Sherman's Valley as early as 1763 because at that time there was a terrible slaughter of the whites in these parts and if my great-grandfather had been among those who were compelled to flee with their families the tale would have been recited to succeeding generations and I would certainly have heard something of it. It is evident, from the records cited above, that during the troublous years that preceded 1764, he had taken the legal steps necessary to provide a home in Sherman's Valley for his family and that about 1766 or 1767, the dates of the warrants referred to above, he became a resident of that part of Toboyne Township which has since been organized as Madison Township.

In Pennsylvania Archives, 3d Series, Vol. XXIV, I find that William Anderson warranted one hundred acres in Guilford Township, Cumberland County, the date of which survey was May 24, 1753, and William McCord warranted one hundred and twenty-five acres in Hamilton Township, the date of which survey was the same. These townships join in the neighborhood of Chambersburg. These surveys, bearing the same date and apparently in the same locality, in connection with the fact that William Anderson's wife's name was McCord, leads me to think it likely that he was living, in 1753, near the present site of Chambersburg.

William Anderson was a covenanter and, no doubt, was one of the many refugees who were compelled to leave Scotland after the failure of the Young pretender in 1746. As a rule, the early immigrants, no matter what country they came from, were malcontents, and they usually had good reasons for being such. This rule, no doubt, would apply, almost without exception, to the Scotchmen who immigrated at this time because the confiscated estates of the losers in the struggle of 1746, as well as the glory of victory, would be attractive to the supporters of the government.

It is interesting to note in this connection that Gen. Hugh Mercer, who about the date of these surveys was practicing medicine in the neighborhood of Guilford and Hamilton Townships, had been a surgeon in the army of the Young pretender and in consequence of the failure of that cause, emigrated to America. Another item that may interest persons who are curious about the convictions of our forefathers upon questions of their day is, Note XVIII, in the back part of Scott's Waverly, which begins as follows: "The faithful friend who pointed out the pass by which the Highlanders moved from Tranent to Seaton, was Robert Anderson, Jr., of Whitburgh, a gentleman of property in East Lothian." Robert would no doubt be among the emigrants, if the Duke of Cumberland didn't get his head before he got started, as the above quotation shows that he rendered valuable service to the army of the Young pretender.

McCord

For the following paragraphs, relative to the history of the McCords, I am indebted to Rev. Robinson's "Fragments of Family and Contemporaneous History."

Our ancestry, the Robinsons, McCords, Blaines, Moorheads, Blacks, etc., with their families and neighbors from the old world, occupied this beautiful region of central Pennsylvania [the present Dauphin County] for twenty or thirty years in almost uninterrupted peace. They went on in the even tenor of their way, extending and improving their farms, patenting new lands, rearing and educating their children, planting everywhere the school house and the church. They penetrated farther to the westward, crossed the Susquehanna, scattered over the beautiful valley now known as Cumberland, and at the time of which we now speak, 1754, a few had gone over the Kittochtinny into the valley beyond, and a few had made settlements along the Juniata. At this date Pennsylvania was a royal province, ruled by governors appointed by the Penn family and approved by the king. The people of these states numbered about one and a half millions and were loyal subjects of George III, and our common justices of the peace signed themselves "His majesty's justices of the peace." They were familiar with "royal proclamations," and paid their taxes in royal currency, pence, shillings, and pounds. The British settlement did not extend beyond the Alleghenies. Our fathers along the Susquehanna and the Kittochtinny hills were holding the frontier. They had for their neighbors on the west and north the Indian tribes. It has been repeatedly charged upon these men since those days when by their bravery and their lives they defended the more eastern settlements of the non-fighting Quakers from the incursions of the savages, that they were the cause of all the Indian wars and bloodshed, that they were a rude and lawless people, who hated, defrauded and provoked the Indian, showing no honor nor magnanimity in their dealings with him. The facts of history dismiss all such calumnies. From the first settlement of this region until the Indians became, with their French allies, the public enemies of the English, our fathers lived in peace; not the life of an Indian was taken, nor the blood of one shed, nor were any of them deprived of their property by these Scotch-Irish settlers. The wars that arose, and in which our fathers bore so terrible a part, rose by no fault of theirs. A series of frauds and unjust measures and encroachments upon the part of the proprietors of the province, the successors of the Penn family, alienated the Indians and after a peace of seventy years produced a most terrible outbreak.

In the fall of 1755 the country west of the Susquehanna possessed three thousand men fit to bear arms; and in August, 1756, exclusive of the provincial forces, there were not one hundred. Not only were our ancestors who had ventured west of the Susquehanna and the Kittochtinny compelled to flee and leave all to the mercy of the savages, but in the tax collector's list of one hundred families who had fled from their homes in Old Hanover Township, east of the Susquehanna, in 1756, we find the names of several of the McCords and Robinsons, and of other families with whom they had intermarried.

A fort for the protection of the neighborhood was erected on the Conococheague Creek which was somewhat famous in its day for the part it bore in the Indian wars. It was known as McCord's Fort, and was doubtless erected on the farm of the ancestry of the McCord families. It is referred to in a very graphic and interesting narrative furnished by Robert Robinson. He says: "Sideling Hill was the first fought battle after Braddock's defeat. In the year 1756, a party of Indians came out of Conococheague, to a garrison of the name of McCord's Fort, and killed some and took a number of prisoners." We learn elsewhere that this was in April of 1756, and that twenty-seven persons were killed or captured. Among the captured was Ann McCord, wife of John McCord. She was re-taken from the Indians about five months later, at the celebrated battle of Kittanning. Robinson goes on to tell us that after the capture of McCord's Fort the Indians took their course near to Fort Littleton, where Captain Hamilton was stationed with a company, and that he hearing of their presence marched forth with his company to meet them, guided by a friendly Indian. "This Indian led the company and came to the tracks of the Indians and followed them to Sideling Hill, where they found them with their prisoners, and having the first fire, but without doing much damage. The Indians returned the fire, defeated our men and killed a number of them. The Indians had McCord's wife with them. They cut off Mr. James Blair's head and threw it into Mrs. McCord's lap, saying it was her husband's head; but she knew it to be Blair's."

The McCord family was a large one in central Pennsylvania as early as 1750. In the list of taxables of that year of the townships of Derry and Hanover, the names of four McCords appear,—John, David, William, and John. No authentic record of the family exists beyond William McCord, who resided in Sherman's Valley, in a house which is still standing (1867) and which was erected over one hundred years ago. In the burial grounds of Derry, Hanover, and other of the early Presbyterian churches of central Pennsylvania, lie the remains of many who bear the name and are doubtless descendants of the original families that settled here, and who were closely connected by ties of blood. Some of the kin went south at an early day. Their descendants are now unknown to the northern branch.

Russells and Armstrongs

My knowledge of the Russells and Armstrongs and is very limited. When my mother was about seventy-eight years old, and therefore her memory was dim, she told me that her father, who was born April 29, 1783, was raised in Augusta County, Virginia, and that the family afterward moved to Albemarle County, Virginia. Her grandfather was a slave holder, and it was her impression that he came from Ireland, and his wife came from Scotland. From her I got the idea that her grandparents' names were Alexander and Mary, but when I recall that those were the names of her parents I am inclined to think that there may have been a misunderstanding about that.

Augusta County was at one time very large, taking in not only the western part of Virginia but the present State of Kentucky, and it may be that Albemarle County is a part of the original Augusta County. Therefore I think that they always lived in what is now Albemarle County. There is nothing extraordinary in her grandfather being a slave holder; some of her Pennsylvania relatives were slave holders, at a much later date. Some of the descendants of the Russells think that they were of English extraction, but when we recall that many of the original settlers of the Shenandoah Valley migrated from Pennsylvania and that there were Russells and Armstrongs among the Scotch and Scotch-Irish of the Keystone State, it gives color to the idea that they may not have been English.

I have no means of determining whether the idea that the Russells are of English extraction was handed down from an earlier generation or whether it is the prompting of an ambition to connect up with the illustrious English family of that name. I have a letter, written by my grandmother soon after she became the wife of Alexander Russell, in which she tells her sister, Mrs. Margaret Johnston, in tart language, of the ill treatment accorded to herself and her husband by the wife of her brother, James, in Kentucky. An ingenious novelist could, I think, find ample suggestion in this letter for a chapter illustrating how Scottish prejudice was roused by the bonnie Scotch lassie taken up with the bluidie southron, and thus establish to his own satisfaction the English origin of Mr. Russell, but upon the other hand it is well known that Scotch families sometimes institute very belicose proceedings among themselves without the intervention of any extraneous excitant. Be that as it may, I must not fail to mention in this connection that I have a number of letters which show that the descendants of Mrs. Russell and this brother shared each others joys and sorrows in a most intimate and cordial manner for a long period of years after the events referred to in the above mentioned letter.

The only additional matter of interest available, concerning the Virginia tributary, is found in letters in my possession. The following letter, of

Oct. 30, 1824, was no doubt written with the intention of sending it to the person addressed by the hand of some acquaintance. For some reason it was never sent and there is nothing about it to indicate where the persons lived for whom it was intended.

October 30, 1824.

Dear Brothers: I yet am spared to let you know that I am yet in the land of the living, thanks to the Giver of all health for His kindness to us. This part of the world has been very much subject to chills and fevers for three or four years back, but we have no reason to complain. We have had but little sickness in our family.

I received a letter from Aunt Jane Robertson last fall, and four of the letters you sent to Elizabeth and Jane Ranking which was the first thing that gave me information to know where to write to you. Both James and Robert Ranking are dead, but their families were well when I received their letters last November. James Robertson was living then. Aunt Jane's family are all married but Lettice. William married a daughter of Thomas Turks. George married a daughter of Robert Hancebarger's.

We have seven of a family, five daughters and two sons.

I wish you to write as soon as you receive my letter. Direct your letters to Myamy County, State of Ohio, Washington Township, Piqua Town. Our land here is all run off in miles square and every six miles square makes a township. I live ninety miles from Cincinnati, right up the big Myama. If you have any word from brother Mathew or John let me know, no more.

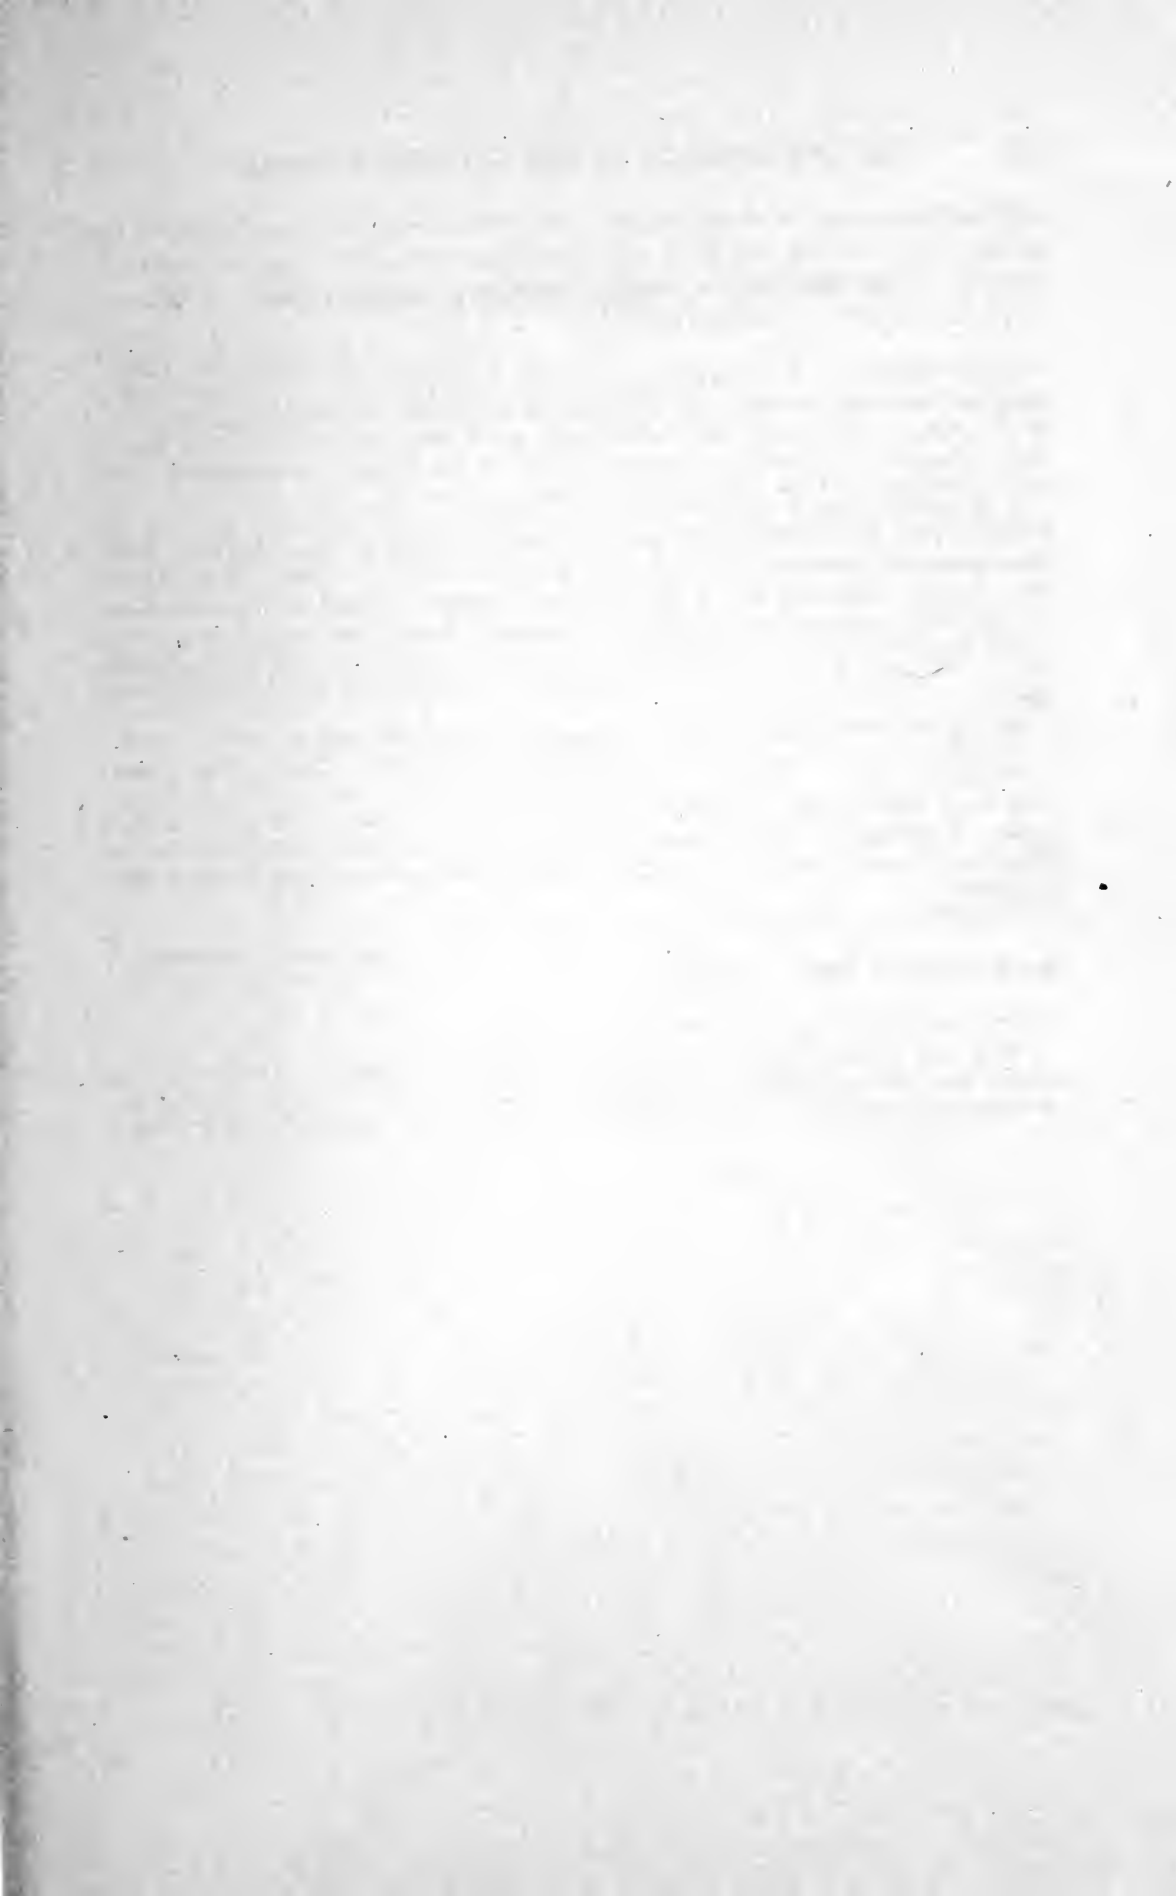

Remain your affectionate brother and sister,

A. AND MARY RUSSELL.

To William or James Russell.

October 15, 1846, Lettitia A. Russell writes:

"We had a letter from Aunt Jane Rankin in Virginia. They were all well. Aunt Betsy, William and family are living in Missouri. Those are the only two that are alive of father's people. I would like to see them."

John Johnston came to America from near Enniskillen, Fermanaugh County, Ireland, soon after the Revolution. I know nothing about his wife. This is one of the three large families spoken of by Col. John Johnston, a nephew of this John Johnston, in his letter of Oct. 10, 1857, of which a partial copy is presented in the preceding pages. John Johnston, probably this one, was a tax payer in Toboyne Township in 1788 and 1789, but his sojourn here was of short duration, as indicated by the following letter :

KENTUCKY, BOURBON COUNTY, May 7, 1793.

Loving Brother and Sister: I take this opportunity of letting you know that the remainder of your brothers and sisters and father are well at present. You wrote to me to let you know the first opportunity the certainty concerning Stephen's death. The report you heard was too true, for on the morning of the 23d of last August, in less than one hour after I gave the letter out of my hand the alarming news concerning his death came to hand. He was at work thirteen miles from home and we never heard he was sick till we heard of his death; it was so sudden that he went at night to his bed and complained of nothing but a headache and was found dead in his bed the next morning. My father has his health better, year past, than he has had this many years. You complain of us not writing to you, but I think that we write oftener than you do. We remain in this same place yet but I am determined to move as soon as possible, but is not determined where. In a few weeks I intend to go to the Siota to see that country. I think that you had best come down and see that country, it gets a very great name. I was told that you had some notion of coming to see this country. I would be glad to see you here but not to live here. Write by the bearer, John Scott, the particulars where you intend going for I would be glad to meet with you in some country. Remember me to Thos. Johnston and wife. Nelly has her compliments to Peggy. No more at present, but remain your loving brother.

JAMES AND MARGARET JOHNSTON.

Andrew Johnston.

I know nothing later of Andrew or the father.

Elizabeth was the wife of William Campbell, who sold his home to William Anderson, in Sherman's Valley, Pa., and went to the neighborhood of Piqua, Ohio, about 1812. They had a son, John, who was married May 21, 1822. Mr. Campbell was buried April 2, 1839.

Eleanor married a man whose name was Johnston; she was living, as late as 1835, near Piqua, Ohio, with a son Jesse. Jesse's family consisted at that time of "four little girls." He and his wife, Martha, probably his mother, and his children moved to near Dayton, Indiana, in 1836. He conveyed his Indiana property to David Ross, Aug. 23, 1847.

There were, no doubt, other sons and daughters in this family and I have written to a number of persons by the name of Johnston for the purpose of finding out if they were descendants of the family but have found none. There are numerous remarks in the letters I have that seem to me to suggest that all of the family except James went West. Take, as an illustration, the first sentence in Andrew's letter. I understand that he had in mind his brother James and his sister, Mrs. Campbell, and that he tells them that "the remainder" are well. If some of that remainder had been in any of the eastern states he would not have known whether they were well or not. After the Campbells go West none of the letters make any allusion to other brothers or sisters of James, who are yet in the East.

Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston was born at North Washington which, at the time of his birth, was in Bourbon County, and we used to flatter ourselves with the idea that this famous man was one of our near kinsmen, but I have to own that I spoiled that felicitous delusion by asking Prof. G. R. Johnston, who was teaching in Kentucky in 1910, to investigate. He learned that General Johnston was a son of Dr. John Johnston, who came there from Connecticut.

William Anderson, Sr., was a Scotch Covenanter. It would seem from the records referred to upon the preceding pages that he located in what is now Madison Township, Perry Co., Pa., about 1766. I think that he and his wife and her father and brother, (both named William McCord,) came here from the neighborhood of Chambersburg, Pa. Letters and other papers that I found at the old Anderson home and public records seem to me to point to that conclusion.

In looking over the letters, etc., which have accumulated in the Anderson home, now occupied by Arthur Anderson, I found many interesting things, most of which are too lengthy to insert here. Among them was a receipt, a copy of which follows:

Recd. from John Nelson and Wm. Anderson, Executors of the last will and testament of William Anderson, deceased, the sum of two pounds, one shilling and nine pence, being for whiskey used at the funeral and on that occasion of the deceased, February 2, 1802.

Recd. by me, WILLIAM CAMPBELL.

£2-1-9.

It is difficult for people who have been taught that whiskey is not good for anything but snake bite to understand what they would want with about ten dollars worth of whiskey at a funeral, in February, and it seems a pity to find that the patriarch of such a host should be overtaken by death when, according to the approved ideas of his day, he was so ill prepared (for the funeral), but it is a comfort to know that, notwithstanding this oversight, means were found to mitigate the grief of his friends by the agent that is celebrated in song and story as the most reliable antidote for Scottish sorrow.

Ruth died unmarried.

Samuel was a merchant and lived in Perry Co., Pa. He married a Miss Linn, but left no issue.

James Johnston was a farmer and lived in what is now Toboyne Township, Perry Co., Pa. In the warrant issued to William Adams, by the Commonwealth, July 29, 1762, the tract of land which later became his home is designated by the manorial title, "Eden." It was sold to William Anderson by Mr. Adams, April 12, 1791, 300 acres for 500 pounds. James Johnston purchased it from the heirs of William Anderson, his father-in-law, in 1811. It was afterward the home of his son Alexander and is now the home of James Johnston, the son of Alexander.

Jane became the wife of John Reed, and died without issue.

William Anderson was a farmer and lived at Andersonburg upon the homestead left by his father. He was a member of the legislature from Cumberland County, before the organization of Perry County, in 1820, and was associate judge at the time of his death.

William B. succeeded his father upon the ancestral farm. He was a member of the legislature three years and state senator three years, thus being the choice of the voters at six elections.

Margaret married Stewart Turbett, a farmer of Juniata County, but they had no children.

George Anderson moved to Ohio or Indiana in early manhood. His remains rest in the Centre Presbyterian graveyard and the stone upon the grave says that he died March 6, 1831, aged 48 years, etc., thus making the year of his birth 1783, if correct.

I do not know whether the members of the third generation were married or not.

In a letter written to Ed. C. Johnston, by William Anderson, Family No. 24, it is stated that "William died of fever in New Orleans, Watson died in Ohio, and Alexander died in Indiana, from accidentally shooting himself in the hand."

William Douglass moved from Sherman's Valley about 1810 or 1811 and settled in Ohio. June 9, 1812, he writes to William Anderson, from Madison Township, Highland Co., describing the crops he is raising there, and in 1813 other letters refer to the family as living in Milford Township, Butler Co., Ohio. They made the latter neighborhood their permanent abiding place and many of their descendants live there.

Margaret became the wife of a man whose name was Vandergrift, but no trace of any descendants can be found.

Mary became the wife of Dr. George M. Wallace and left no children.

From a genealogy prepared by his son, William, we learn that James Anderson migrated from Sherman's Valley to Kentucky in 1802, and soon afterward bought a farm five miles south of Lexington and one mile south of Russell's Spring.

Mary Logan was a daughter of Samuel Logan, who moved from the same valley in 1786 and settled three miles south of Georgetown, Ky.

From a letter written in 1815, by Mrs. Russell, James Anderson's sister, I learn that he had at some previous time, been "struck with the palsy" and was otherwise unfortunate. The situation of a family containing six small children whose father was paralyzed, at that time and place, must have been distressing indeed.

Mrs. Anderson's father was no doubt a son or grandson of Alexander Logan, one of the earliest settlers of Sherman's Valley, and one who sacrificed his life to the cause of civilization. In a local history I find, "On the farm of George McMillen stands (1884) the celebrated Logan house which was the residence of Alexander Logan. His survey for 549 acres was made Feb. 3, 1755." He and his son John were killed by the Indians in 1763. The same history says: "George, Anthony, and William, the surviving sons of Alexander Logan, sold the property in 1785,"—the year before Samuel went to Kentucky.

Samuel Logan's wife was Margaret, daughter of George Robinson, who built Fort Robinson, Sherman's Valley, in 1755. From Robinson's Family Memorials I copy: "In 1785 Jonathan Robinson visited this new region, selected several hundred acres of its rich soil, in the heart of the justly celebrated blue grass region, and returning removed his family at once to his new home. Other members of the family of George Robinson followed, and about the year 1797 he, with his wife, removed thither, settling beside his sons and daughters near the present site of Georgetown, Ky."

After Mrs. Anderson became the wife of Rev. William Baldrige, she and her family moved to his home near North Liberty, Adams Co., Ohio, and after the death of Rev. Baldrige she and her younger children had their home with her son, William Anderson, at Spring Hill, Decatur Co., Indiana.

Benjamin Baldrige became a minister of the gospel; his wife's maiden name was Maria Gilmore. They had two children.

Nancy Baldrige became the wife of John I. Bonner, and at her death left one child that lived but a short time. Mr. Bonner returned to his native state, South Carolina, studied theology, became a minister and was editor of a religious paper at Duewest, S. C.

My mother, Lettitia Ann, of this family, told me years ago that her parents were married near Lexington, Ky., and when I learned that her brother, James, lived five miles south of Lexington and one mile from Russell's Spring, it seemed that an environment was presented in the peaceful blue grass region that for once, lead to harmony between a child of the Keystone State and one from the Old Dominion.

From a newspaper clipping advertising an offer, by Samuel Marshall, executor, to sell the farm of Alexander Russell, deceased, I learn that the home of this family was in Miami Co., Ohio, four and one-half miles from Piqua, and consisted of the northeast and northwest quarters of Sections thirty-four and thirty-five, Township nine, in range five.

Andrew was engaged much of his time in wagoning to Cincinnati.

Elizabeth became the wife of John Linn, and died without issue.

William Johnston migrated from near New Germantown, Pa., to Miami County, Ohio, in February, 1814. His granddaughter, Mrs. Snow, has the letters patent, issued under the hand of President James Madison, June 10, 1816, for the land upon which he lived the balance of his days. The letters recites that full payment has been made for the southeast quarter of Section twenty-seven, Township nine, range five. Upon this farm the wife, Margaret, Nathan and John resided until the time of their death.

William, the son, migrated to California in 1853 and engaged for a time in mining. At the time of his death he resided in Modesto, Stanislaus County, Cal., and also owned property in Waterford, the same county.

Mary became the wife of John Wright and died without issue.

John Johnston made his home upon a farm adjoining that of his father and remained there his entire life time. He was a man of commanding presence and acknowledged influence in his community. He was elected three times to the state legislature and, I have been informed, impaired his popularity by favoring the adoption of a free school system. His first term in the legislature was 1819, fifteen years before the passage of the act establishing free schools in this state. He had no children. His wife was a daughter of Alexander McClure and Sarah Douglass, according to information furnished by Miss Margaret Campbell, Family No. 35.

James Johnston went to Indiana in the spring of 1823. The day preceding his departure, I am told, he participated rather enthusiastically in a race quarrel between the Irish and the Dutch, and after the melee was over it was thought that an antagonist whom he had handled pretty roughly would die from the effects. As a result of this complication he departed before the dawn of the following day. The Dutchman recovered and mended our shoes for many years.

In 1831 he writes to his father: "My family consists of myself, wife, daughter Margaret, and two bound children, a boy and a girl."

March 30, 1833, he writes to his brother George: "Scarlet fever has visited four of my family."

May 11, 1833, in a letter to his brother George, he announces the death of Margaret.

In July, 1845, Lettitia A. Russell writes to George Johnston: "Your brother James' eldest daughter died this spring."

April 14, 1856, William Anderson writes to George Johnston: "You brother James' eldest daughter died last fall."

These letters indicate that he was a farmer and lived at Honey Creek, Vigo Co., Indiana.

Mary became the wife of Samuel Crawford Scott, in recent years a clerk in the Internal Revenue service. Both have died leaving no issue.

James left no children and I understand was never married.

It would seem like lack of appreciation to pass my mother without comment and, although the past may not be free from evidences of such lack, it is perhaps fitting that I should acknowledge the debt of gratitude that her years of single handed care and anxiety have entailed and express the hope that I may attest my appreciation by rendering similar service to others.

After his marriage he lived in Perry Co., Pa., until the time of his death, which was only a few years. His death was caused by burns received in the burning of the house in which they lived.

Robert A. served his country during the Civil War as a member of Company F, 208th Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers. He went West in 1879 and has not since been heard from by his former acquaintances. He is probably dead, as I have recently learned from the Pension Department that he has never applied for a pension.

From a genealogy prepared by William Anderson, we learn that he was born five miles south of Lexington, Ky., on a farm one mile south of Russell's Spring, and lived there until he was about sixteen years old, after which he lived with his step-father until 1823, when he moved to Decatur Co., Indiana.

He wrote a number of letters in my possession and is frequently mentioned in other letters. During the fourth and fifth decades of the last century he kept a store at Springhill, Ind. His letters indicate that he was a man of culture as well as a man of strong religious convictions and exalted ideals. The esteem in which he is held by others is indicated by the fact that everybody refers to him as "Uncle Billy." All speak affectionately of the family, composed of Uncle Billy, mother, and Logan's two little boys. It would seem that while he had no family of his own he entered most heartily into the joys and sorrows of all his brothers, sisters, nieces and nephews, and his conduct frequently witnessed his belief that "a brother is born for adversity."

He spent the last years of a long and honorable life at Richland, Ind., leaving no children to cherish his memory.

A. R. Johnston graduated from the Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, Pa., in the class of 1881, spent a year at the same school in post-graduate work, served a year as resident physician in the Philadelphia Hospital, and is now practicing medicine in New Bloomfield, Pa. It is customary, I believe, for distinguished looking authors to embellish their works with portraits of themselves, but my experience with photographers teaches me that they have no respect for the feelings of their patrons, and I will, therefore, portray my own features so that I think you will recognize me as soon as you see me, and if you never see me you may like the portrait better than you would like me. I was five feet, eleven; bony and angular, and weighed one hundred seventy to one hundred seventy-five before I began to wilt and curl up. My recollection is that my hair was brown. Charitable people say that my eyes are brown but, if otherwise disposed, they might with equal truth call them yellow. A description of my nose would be premature because it is not yet done growing. At present I weigh from one hundred thirty-five to one hundred forty, depending upon the humidity of the atmosphere, and I do not know how tall I would be if I were carefully laundered. A careful survey of my architecture seems to justify the conclusion that nature's original intention was to develop a pretty good specimen of mankind, but some evil influence has bankrupted the enterprise. My intellect has been subjected to the developing influence of the public school, an academy and a medical college. These were preceded by a preparatory course under the guidance of a good mother and I am now taking a post-graduate under the tutelage of a good wife. If my attainments are meager, for one so highly favored, I leave to my friends to decide whether my shortcomings are due to defective raw material or to over-training. Morally and religiously, I belong to that large class of Christians who are strong on profession, precise in doctrine, strict in criticism and regular dodgers in practice.

Frank received the B.S. degree in the civil engineering department of the New Mexico School of Mines in 1913.

Catharine is a member of the class of 1917 at Wilson College, Chambersburg, Pa.

John is (1914) a student at the New Bloomfield Academy and intends to enter college next year.

During his youth, I am told, Col. A. K. McClure was what is commonly known as a bad boy, the despair of the school master, etc. At the age of fifteen his father apprenticed him to learn the tanning trade and soon after his graduation from the tannery he embarked upon a career that led from obscurity to prominence in the councils of state and nation. He was editor of the Sentinal, a Whig paper published in Mifflin, Pa., from 1846 until 1850, editor of the Franklin Repository, published in Chambersburg, Pa., from 1850 until 1855, member of the convention that met in Pittsburgh in 1855 to organize the Republican party in Pennsylvania, elected member of the legislature by Franklin County in 1857 and again in 1858, elected state senator in 1859, chairman of the Republican State Committee during the first Lincoln campaign, during the early part of the Civil War he was chairman on the senate committee on military affairs, delegate at large to the Republican National Convention of 1864, elected to the legislature in 1864, state senator as an Independent in 1872, and soon afterward he became editor of the Philadelphia Times, a position that he filled with distinction for about a quarter of a century. These are a few of the incidents of a life whose record it is not necessary to relate here in detail because it is a part of current history.
